Appomattox County Library

By Verna Conner

Many of you have read and enjoyed the books by Emmie Ferguson Farrar. The library has Old Virginia Houses along the James, and Old Virginia Houses - The Mobjack Bay Country. Now another has been added, called Old Virginia Houses - The Piedmont. This one was given to the library by Francis E. and Virginia B. Tyler who are the present owners of "Eldon". This lovely old home is just north of Appomattox and was built in 1845. It is the former home of the Flood family and is familiar to all residents of Appomattox County.It was sold by the Floods in the 1940's and purchased by the present owners in 1962. A description of this home along with others such as Walnut Hill, Sweeny Cottage, McLean House,Wyatt-Franklin House, Mathews House, Woodlawn, Redfields, Mount Comfort and Rosedale, is well worth reading. Also three and a half miles west of Appomattox is the Davidson House owned by the late Miss Kate Davidson and Mrs. Rolfe Horsley and the present owners, Mr. J. Crawford Davidson and J. Osborne Davidson. Very interesting too, are pictures of Walker's Church, built in the 18th century and the old Hixburg Stage Stop. The places mentioned above are just a small fraction of the book so be sure to see it. The library is happy to have it and grateful to the donors.

While rummaging through a box of books given to the library by Mrs. Alfred Jones, I came across a little book by the one-time famous "rags to riches" author, Horatio Alger, Jr. How many are willing to date themselves by saying,"I read those when I was young"?As you may remember, Alger was the son of a clergyman and the stories were written in 1866 or about that time. They were "pure in tone and inspiring in influence" and were about real boys who did honest things. By 1910 his books were selling at the rate of a million copies a year and later over two million a year. Thank you, Mrs. Jones for taking us back to our childhood.

For sometime now, the title of the book,"Can't Read, Can't Write, Can't Talk to Good Either" has intrigued me so last week I read it. It is the true story of the author's child who is handicapped by dyslexia, which is described as a severe language disability. He was considered a very bright child - in fact bordering on genius - and his pediatrician as well as his teachers, thought he would outgrow it. Finally at the age of four he was pronounced a retarded child. This his parents refused to accept and kept trying to find what was wrong. At age seventeen his trouble was diagnosed as dyslexia. The TAKL in the title is not a mistake, but the way a child with his trouble sees words and that is why they are slow to read.

Other non - fiction books which have just come in are as follows:Witness to Power by Marquis Childs; Inside the Company-CIA Diary by Philip Agee; Aquarium Fishes in Color by J. M. Madsen; All About Motorcycles by Max Alth; Bear - the hard life and good times of Alab ama's Coach Bryant; Conversations With Kennedy by Benjamin C. Bradlee.

And now since hunting season opens this week, the library wishes you to know that it has some books you will want to read: Hunter's Blaze the Trail by Edith McCall; World's Great Stories of Hunting and Adventure by Bradley Robinson; Education of a Turkey Hunter by William Frank Hanenkrat; My Health is Better in November by Havilah Babcock and many others.

APPOMATTOX 4-H RACING PIGEON CLUB

This club held its monthly meeting November 8. This meeting consisted of a tour to members' homes to view the amount of progress members have made with their birds. The primary purpose of the tour was to examine pigeon roosts, health of the birds, and to observve how well individual members had trained their racing pigeons.

This summer members of the Appomattox 4-H Racing Pigeon Club received the young birds and were given the responsibility of building a roost, feeding and caring for the birds, training the birds and attending regular club meeting.

What's involved in training a racing a racing pigeon? Young pigeons are very much like any other young animal in that they must be trained to perform certain functions. Training a racing pigeon involves teaching the bird that your roost is his home and how to enter the trap door to his roost. It also involves building up a bird's ability to fly distances. This is done by releasing the bird at your home in late afternoon prior to feeding time. This is repeated and then at greater distances from your home until the young bird has developed the ability to fly well and the knowledge to return immediately to his roost. There are quite a number of finer points to be acquired in order to successfully train racing pigeons.
